

Portrait head of Alexander the Great

€780.00

Product no.: IN-002082

He preferred an intense life rather than a long one. In just a few years, the titanic youth transformed the entire ancient world and carried Greekness as far as the Nile and the Indus. But although he considered himself a god, he was unable to realise his grandiose political vision, the fusion of Orient and Occident. Leochares was, alongside Praxiteles, the most important sculptor of the Late Classical period. He immortalised his essence, beauty and genius, cruelty and goodness. Original: Acropolis Museum, Athens. Leochares, 335 BC, marble. Polymer ars mundi museum replica cast by hand, height with pedestal 49 cm.

Product link: <https://www.arsmundi.de/en/portrait-head-of-alexander-the-great-002082/>