Product no.: IN-716913

He was the place to go for healing when no one else's healing skills could help: Throughout antiquity, the temple of Asclepius, the physician of the gods, was regarded as a place of pilgrimage. The great statue of the gods in the temple, as reported by Pausanias, was lost in the turmoil of the time. What remained were small statuettes like these, with which those saved by his divine healing art paid tribute to him. The sculptor's model shows Asclepius in typical representation with his viper coiled around his staff as a powerful figure completely shaped by will.

Polymer ars mundi sculpture model, cast by hand and partly gilded by hand. Reduction. Height 30 cm.
