

Ephebe head "Young Man with Fillet of Victory", version in bronze

€1,980.00

Product no.: IN-002985

Rome's vocation was to absorb the legacy of foreign advanced civilisations, and they tried to infuse it with its own essence. This ephebe head with its even features, for example the fillet of victory knotted at the neck, which was perhaps once decorated with silver inlays, or the originally gilded lips, are an almost classical example of this. It is not an epigone copy of a Greek model but rather the artefact of a period that consciously worshipped the strict Attic harmony.

Original: Staatliche Antikensammlungen und Glyptothek, Munich. Roman, around the birth of Christ after a model from the 4th century BC.

Bronze, with fine patina, cast using the Lost-Wax-Process. Height with pedestal 33 cm.

Product link: <https://www.arsmundi.de/en/ephebe-head-young-man-with-fillet-of-victory-version-in-bronze-002985/>