The wisdom of ravens: Ravens are by far the most intelligent birds. They occupy a special place in mythology. The Norse god Odin, for example, has two of them permanently at his side: Hugin and Munin, who keep him informed about what is happening in the wide world. The names of these two companions, which are derived from the Old Norse words "thought" and "memory", testify to the respect that people had for the intelligence of the corvids in early times.
