

Ernst Fuchs: Sculpture "My Unicorn Pegasus", bronze

€7,580.00

Product no.: IN-936704

Ernst Fuchs merges two mythical creatures of horse form: the unicorn and the winged horse Pegasus. Especially in heraldry, the unicorn is usually depicted to "jump" upright. Fuchs now raises it fully into the air as Pegasus. The idealist Pegasus is also considered to be a source of inspiration, as a hoofbeat on the mountain causes the muses' spring Hippukrene to spring up. In fact, both Pegasus and the unicorn have already arrived in the sky as constellations, with Pegasus bordering the constellation of the swan: If you look at the horn on the forehead of Ernst Fuchs' sculpture, you notice that it is not straight but curved like a swan's neck.

"The constant companion of my arts, the unicorn, is also the originator of all transformations. The unicorn is the heraldic sign of my efforts to create the total work of art. Now it has risen to become Pegasus. In my work, the two myths have now united. Even the horn has become recognisable in its resemblance to Lohengrin's swan as a sign of his arrival from the Grail. My unicorn Pegasus is the symbol of a new dimension of my arts and their summary in the total work of art. To the friends of my art and especially to you - most sincerely dedicated." (Ernst Fuchs)
