Exclusive ars mundi Anniversary Edition on the occasion of Loriot's 100th birthday.

Bernhard-Viktor Christoph-Carl von Bülow was born on 12 November 1923 in Brandenburg an der Havel, Germany. At the end of this year, we celebrate his 100th birthday.

Even during his lifetime, he was a legend of the century as the humourist "Loriot". And there is a technical reason for this. Loriot worked with great precision. He was a precision engineer of humour who mastered the accurate mark of a caricature, the "timing" of a sketch or the setting of a punch line like no other. For Loriot, precision included sensitivity. Loriot observed closely, and out of this observation, he developed a sense for the comical that lies just a touch away from the seemingly normal, the accepted.

He was a clever observer, smiling mischievously to himself, who opened our eyes to the absurdity of everyday life situations. His themes: A conversation that gets out of hand. An absurd situation in which all participants laboriously try to keep their form. The desperate attempt to do everything right and for that very reason seems a little comical or even fail.

But he would never have doubted the value of formal politeness itself, quite the contrary. His floral gentleman may be somewhat traditional and overly concerned with form and convention. He is an amiable character. Loriot loved people by making us laugh at them. Especially the slightly peculiar ones.

Loriot's 100th birthday is a special occasion for us to publish the exclusive anniversary edition of his The Knight of Flowers.
