"Colours were my happiness, and to me, it seemed as though they loved my hands." Emil Nolde described his art with these words. After arduous beginnings, his art was to make him one of the most important painters of the 20th century.

Not only the use of bright, luminous colours characterises his works on canvas, but maybe, even more, his famous watercolours. Nolde is considered a "magician" who intuitively understood how to lend his motifs an expressive colour dramaturgy of great emotional impact. This watercolour - especially emphasised by the title "red, blue and green" - places the depicted motif and the chosen colour composition on an equal footing. Thus, Nolde proves to be a highly modern artist, who was ahead of his time because his works were perceived as avant-garde and groundbreaking in post-war Germany (and consequently a selection of Nolde's works was prominently represented at each of the first three documenta exhibitions - 1955, 1959 and 1964).
