

Georg Kolbe: Sculpture "Grief" (1921), bronze

€4,400.00

Product no.: IN-882615

In 1912, Georg Kolbe caused a sensation in Berlin with his "Dancer" - his most famous work to date. The theme of dance and the expressive, even ecstatic movement pervades his sculptural work well into the 1920s, as it does in his Kneeling Woman, created in 1921.

In the decade between these two works, Kolbe had received the title of professor (1918) and - together with Ernst Barlach and Wilhelm Lehmbruck - was admitted to the Prussian Academy of Arts (1919). In the 1920s, he was undisputedly considered to be one of the most influential sculptural artists in Germany. As a result, he came to the attention of major art collectors all over the world. One copy later found its way into the legendary Nelson Rockefeller art collection - the model for our exclusive edition.
