The painting is a masterpiece of impressionist painting. The work of art appeared at the Stuttgart gallery in 1906 and can be seen as the starting point for the important collection of modern art. Monet's artistic credo was to represent the immaterial, pure light by depicting its effect on visible things. The interaction of thousands of strokes of pure colour creates the composition and conveys the impression of a spring landscape flooded with light. By freeing his painting from narrative elements, Monet concentrated the viewer's gaze on the phenomenon of his then-revolutionary view of art.
