

Paul Wunderlich: "Venus Necklace" with cultured pearl

€490.00

Product no.: IN-367671

Venus is the goddess of love and beauty. She is called the foam-born because it is said that she rose from whitecaps after her birth on the island of Cyprus. Renaissance painters associated the birth of the goddess of love with the shell, such as Sandro Botticelli for his famous painting "The Birth of Venus". There is no doubt that Botticelli's depiction inspired Paul Wunderlich. Wunderlich, with the imagination of an artist and the precision of a mathematician, developed an ideal shape that does not deny its origins in the representational and yet transcends reality.

The "Venus necklace" by Paul Wunderlich consists of a slightly curved oval that holds a shimmering cultured pearl inside a matt concave. The shell-shaped necklace has a shiny polished finish on the outside, creating a charming contrast between the two surfaces on the inside and the outside. The necklace is made of solid sterling silver. On the back, it is stamped with the artist's signature, numbering and silver hallmark.

Necklace made of solid 925 sterling silver with a Japanese cultured pearl, numbered and signed, and with the official silver hallmark. The height of the pendant is 5 cm. The diameter of the hoop is 13.5 cm. Each copy comes with a certificate signed by the artist.
