€370.00

Product no.: IN-879204.R1

He is considered one of the founding fathers of Impressionism. And yet the strictly Impressionist approach is only really authoritative for a comparatively short, early creative period. Later, Renoir turned primarily to classical themes and classical pictorial genres. What remained was his sovereign handling of colour, light and shadow: his Bouquet of Roses in a Blue Vase from 1892 (Renoir had long since become a recognised and wealthy artist) shows the splendour of blossoming roses in rather strong or hard brushstrokes. Original: privately owned.

Giclée edition on artist's canvas, printed in Dietz-Offizin. Limited edition of 990 copies. Stretched on a stretcher frame. Numbered on the back. Framed in a high-quality solid wood frame. Size 76 x 48 cm (h/w).
