Product no.: IN-920073.R1

Conrad Felixmüller's pictorial early-phase work is determined by strong influences of Expressionism, which he, in contrast to his colleagues, understands in a socially critical sense and soon transforms into an expressive realism with an individual character. Felixmüller captured scenes of everyday life in the powerful lines of his drypoint etchings and woodcuts.

In the present work, he portrayed a woman during her morning routine, lost in thoughts while combing her hair. The sheet is numbered, signed by hand, and additionally monogrammed by the artist on the printing plate.
