Aquagravure:

Aquagravure is a printing technique that allows artists to give their graphic work a three-dimensional structure: a mould designed by the artist is placed in a vat of thick pulp, which is then drained and dried over the course of several days and under high pressure. The result is a sheet of pulp that has taken on the shape of the original down to the finest structures. Aquagravures are often further refined sheet by sheet. In this way, they are unique pieces in two respects: Not only the final processing but also the artist's "canvas" itself is an exclusive unique piece.
