Exclusively at ars mundi: Emil Nolde's floral beauty on glass.

Working with bright, vivid colours characterized Emil Nolde's (1867-1956) works on canvas, but even more so, his famous watercolours. He is regarded as a "magician" who intuitively understood how to infuse his subjects with an expressive colour dramaturgy of great emotional impact.

The artist and his wife Ada created gardens wherever they settled, and so they transformed the grassy land around their Seebüll home into a blooming paradise. "The colours of the flowers attracted me irresistibly... the purity of these colours, I loved them," the Nolde Foundation Seebüll quotes him, which ensures that irises, delphiniums, Turkish poppies, cranesbills, lupins and much more bloom here from April to October.
