€1,480.00

Product no.: IN-916512

In Plato's Symposium, the comic poet Aristophanes explains love as follows: Humans were originally created with four arms, four legs and a head with two faces. Fearing their power, Zeus split them into two separate parts, condemning them to spend their lives in search of their other halves.

Bodirsky interprets the "spherical man" as two upright human figures that, only when joined together, form one whole. Inside them, however, the deeper meaning of their community - the child - is sheltered and protected.

3-pcs bronze sculpture, cast using the Lost-Wax-Process, chiselled and patinated by hand. Limited to 99 numbered and signed copies. Height 22 cm (couple), height 10 cm (child). Weight 3,9 kg.
