Gustav Klimt:
Picture "Adele Bloch-Bauer I" (1907), framed

€490.00

Product no.: IN-777613

"It is the highest sum ever paid for a painting", reported the New York Times excitedly in June 2006. For the record sum of 135 million dollars, the cosmetics manufacturer Ronald Lauder acquired Gustav Klimt's famous oil painting "Adele Bloch-Bauer I" - also known as "Golden Adele" - for the New Gallery in Manhattan, New York.

The icon of Art Nouveau once hung in Vienna's Belvedere City Palace as an inalienable Austrian cultural heritage with the "Kiss" and other masterpieces by Viennese master Gustav Klimt. After years of litigation, it has now been returned to the descendants of the original owners.
This was the first time such a high-profile Klimt painting had come onto the art market - and it immediately eclipsed the then-highest price of $104.1 million for a Picasso painting.

Original: New Gallery, New York.
Reproduced using the Fine Art Giclée process directly onto 100% cotton artist's canvas and mounted on a stretcher frame for a brilliant, authentic reproduction. Framed in handmade, golden solid wood frame. The edition is limited to 499 copies and individually numbered on the certificate on the back. Size 79 x 79 cm. ars mundi Exclusive Edition.
