"In the morning, lightly wrapped in her bath towel, the girl enters the garden, and the dew shines on the blossoms that lie fully in the sunlight. She stops in front of so much beauty - in this rose garden she remains still to experience all the beauty, the silence and the fragrance with all the fibres of her senses. With this variety of colours, all the roses can only be enjoyed and admired by sinking into oneself. The pensive silence and the wonder that lies in it in the morning is palpable in this girl." (Erwin A. Schinzel)
